■ Daytona, 1972. T-Formation. It anticipated that the more "sprint-li format would attract a larger crowd. However, a look at the grandstand reveals the failure of that idea. The all-conquering Ferraris look quite diminutive next to the pair of 911s. While last year it was Ferrari which struggled, now Porsche was relegated a hodge-podge of private entries. Lola is the Bonnier entry, driven by patron and fellow Swede, Reine W. Until Jo Bonnier's fatal accident at Le Mans, this team was the cream of the two-liter class.

Galli/de Adamich 33/3 was stalled with wheel bearing trouble but the Stommelen/Revson 33TT3 briefly held the lead during the Ferraris' stops. At the halfway mark of the shortened race it was Ferrari-Alfa-Ferrari-Alfa, driven respectively by; Andretti/Ickx, Stommelen/Revson, Schenken/Peterson, and Elford/Marko. The next three positions were all Porsche, with the 908s lying ahead of the remarkably well-placed Haywood/Gregg 911S that was enroute to another of their innumerable class wins. The Tony Dean/Bob Brown 908 later lost a possible fourth place with a broken valve.

Peter Revson's engine let go with less than two hours left in the race. This left it a Ferrari 1-2 as in Argentina. The Elford/Marko Alfa was two laps back in third place and was being pursued by the Regazzoni/Redman Ferrari that had been toiling back up to fifth place. But then very nearly the same thing happened to Redman as had occurred to Clay Regazzoni. The Ferrari again struck some debris, went into a spin, and lost its tail. As the Galli/de Adamich Alfa was by now so distant, the Ferrari held on for fourth place.

Not only could Ferrari savor another solid victory, but they gained much exposure in America as it was accomplished in part by everyone's favorite Italian-American, Mario Andretti. Henceforth, Lola had to try to keep their cars running, while Alfa's task was to find both speed and reliability. Meanwhile, Ferrari didn't even need to have all three of their cars.

Watkins Glen, 1972. Beauty on Outside. The Ferrari Daytona certainly an attractive GT but power to weight ratio worked against it. Throughout the decade many enthusiastic owners tried their hand at it but were frustrated as the more test Porsches and brutish Corvettes their way with the 365GTB/4. Like the other marques, it was a cult to lighten a Daytona into proper racing trim. One of the veterans of it, Jean-Pierre Jarier, has a turn here in the NART entry, alongside the Bob Fosse Corvette.

JOE CALI

Andretti briefly held the lead during the last set of pit stops, but Peterson retook the lead as he began his final stint and Andretti stopped to give the car to Ickx. Peterson was struggling with overheating brakes but worked hard to hold off Ickx, who was gaining on him 2-3 seconds per lap. At 5:50 elapsed time, with perhaps enough time left for six laps, Ickx fought past his teammate for the lead and the win. He arrived at the front by repeatedly setting new records on the revised circuit. It may have been only a 1-2 for Ferrari, but for a change they did it not as a team, but as close-knit rivals. Watkins Glen was yet another variation on Ferrari's theme.

■ 1972—Summary ■

Sometimes from a position of complete dominance, and at other times by struggling for sheer survival, Ferrari completed a perfect season. In one year the 312PB had accomplished far more than the celebrated 512 ever did, and the three-liter car's tenure was not yet over. The races were not the monotonous parade they might have been, thanks to each race having its own little twists and dramas. More often than not Ferrari revealed some fallibility. But Mirage, Lola, and especially Alfa Romeo were not there at the right time to take advantage of this. Both Ferrari and Matra could lay legitimate claim to having had a perfect season. Both met their objectives, but both accomplishments were slightly hollow. Ferrari missed the one great race and Matra missed all but one. The story of the season was equal parts triumph and humiliation. Ferrari could do no wrong, Alfa Romeo could do no right. On the one hand, it is understandable that they were too demoralized to complete the season. But then Lola suffered an even worse fate, the loss of its leader, and yet they elected to continue racing. Also embarrassing to Autodelta was that their points total was nearly matched by Porsche, a marque that did not officially participate.

Porsche's usual commanding win in GT masked some of the patterns in the contest for that trophy. There were always enough 911s about to score some marginal amount of points, whereas the large-bore machinery were missing at many events. It is rare that an all-new type, such as the De Tomaso Pantera could be so influential this quickly among the other production-based cars.

It is of course no surprise on the drivers' ledger that the Ferrari drivers dominated. The top
